MEXICAN AMERICANS--A SURVEY OF RESEARCH
BY THE TEXAS AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATION, 1964-73

Esteban Salinas, Ruth M. Bagnall and William P. Kuvlesky*

INTRODUCTION

Over the last decade, The Texas Agricultural Experiment Station has stimulated and sponsored an increasing amount of research related to the status, problems and future prospects of the Mexican American population in Texas. The fact that most of the research projects evolved and were implemented prior to the development of a strong Chicano Movement in the late sixties--a social movement that has awakened the general public to the problems and needs of this largely disadvantaged minority group--resulted in the availability of scientifically useful information about the Mexican American in Texas in a period of high demand for such knowledge. During this time, TAES social scientists have produced over 40 separate research reports dealing with the Mexican American population which were supported as contributions to six different TAES research projects. ^{1/}

The purpose of the following listing is to increase public awareness of the volume and diversity of TAES research about the Mexican American population and, more importantly, to achieve a broader diffusion of the research findings obtained from these investigations. The remainder of this report consists of a listing of all relevant TAES research reports--and those of selected other Texas A&M researchers--available for distribution. ^{2/}

*Respectively, research assistants and associate professor, Department of Agricultural Economics and Rural Sociology, The Texas Agricultural Experiment Station.

^{1/} Names of these projects and some brief information on each are provided in the APPENDIX located at the end of this report.

^{2/} The listing includes several selected research reports authored by Texas A&M University sociologists on investigations not supported by The Texas A&M Agricultural Experiment Station. These reports are indicated by an asterisk before the author's name.

Copies of most of these reports can be obtained by addressing a request directly to the authors at Department of Agricultural Economics and Rural Sociology, Texas A&M University, College Station, Texas, 77843.
